Reflections On Bahá'u'lláh's Letter To The Christians

Synopsis

Often individual Christians wonder how they would have reacted if they had been a Jew in the time of Christ. On reading Reflections on Bahá'u'lláh's Letter to the Christians the reader will come to understand that we are faced with a similar experience in which mankind is called upon to consider a new outpouring of the Holy Spirit. In a new age you cannot put 'new wine into old skins'. (Matt. 8:17) In this book Jeremy Fox reflects on Bahá'u'lláh's 'letter' to the Christian world, and demonstrates the relevance of its message both to the Bible and to Christians generally. Jeremy Fox was originally from Cornwall and came from a Church of England background. He discovered in the Bahá'í Faith answers to his questions on matters of belief whilst a student at Cambridge University. He taught languages first in Swansea, Wales and then in Scotland on the Isle of Mull, before spending twenty years living and working in the Basque region of France. He now lives with his wife in Scotland. This book was first published in French and translated by the author into English.
