Customer Reviews

I've never really played lottery games very much. I have played scratch tickets from time to time, but up until last year there were many other gambling options close to where I lived in Arizona. The large number of Indian casinos there and the geographical proximity to Nevada meant that I ignored any kind of lottery in favor of Blackjack, Roulette, Craps, and so on. For decades in the Nevada casinos the main rule regarding gaming systems was that if you could do it mentally, you were not considered to be cheating. But in the 90s the casinos there began a practice of asking you to leave the table if they suspected you of card counting (mentally) at Blackjack. That and the abandonment of Five Card Stud poker as the dominant casino poker game in favor of the more remedial Texas Hold'Em made gambling much less fun than it used to be. Then last year I left Arizona and moved to a Southeastern state that has beautiful beaches but few gambling options. In fact, scratch games and the state lottery are the only options, other than one Indian casino more than 200 miles away. I have a decent library of gaming system books, and they are all built around two essential truths. (1) There is no system with guaranteed results and (2) random number sequences derived from a given range appear as trends or patterns over time. The latter statement is the basis of weather prediction, financial analysis, economics, craps betting systems, roulette systems, and so on. It is also the reason that electronic devices are banned on the casino floor in every casino I have been in. Mr.
